

On Inclusive Growth in India

Arup Mitra

Abstract

Inclusive growth refers to creation of ‘decent jobs’ or employment in productive work with adequate and regular earnings. This paper seeks to explain whether the productivity of our labour force engaged in the formal and informal sectors of our economy and employment potentiality has improved or not. It discusses labour force participation and its determinants with the help of Panel Data econometrics and examines the link between skill formation, productivity and employment.