

Counting Jobs in India: A Detailed Review of Labour Database

Jitender Singh and Arup Mitra

Abstract

A detailed review of various sources of labour statistics in India highlights the lack of long-time series data on total employment. The Labour Bureau's attempt since the last couple of years in this respect has been helpful. To gauge the accuracy of these estimates, it is desirable to have data from at least two sources. Dependence on one specific source can be risky.